

SUPSERV ERP

The design, 10 September 2026

25 screens over 6 sections, in the tokens the code already uses. Foundations decides about eighty of the ninety-three routes; a screen earns its own sheet only when it does something the foundations do not already answer.

- 1 Foundations 6 screens
- 2 Inbox and Today 3 screens
- 3 Sales — deal to proforma 5 screens
- 4 Orders to payment 6 screens
- 5 Directory and compliance 2 screens
- 6 Settings and the phone 3 screens

Foundations • 1 of 6

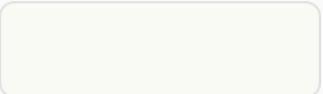

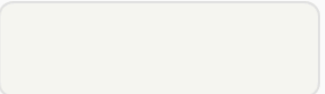

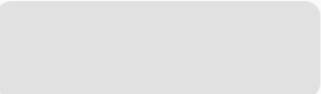

Tokens

Every value here is already in `globals.css`, measured off the screens rather than guessed. Nothing on this sheet is a proposal — it is what the ERP is already made of, written down so ninety-three screens stop inventing their own.

Colour, and what each one is allowed to mean

One accent. Red spent only on things that are actually wrong. Every state also carries text, so colour is never the only signal.

Ink and ground

ink #1a1a19	secondary #5c5c58	muted #8a8a85	plane #fafaf9	card #fdfdfc	sunken #f5f5f3	line #e4e4e1
Body text, and the primary button's fill	Supporting text. 6.4:1 — safe	Captions. 3.3:1 today — R2 darkens it	The page behind the cards	A card's own fill	A well inside a card	Borders

State

good #0ca30c	warning #fab219	serious #ec835a	critical #d03b3b	accent #2a78d6
Done, signed, paid, in date	Needs you, and can still be fixed	Close to the edge — expiring, nearly late	Wrong, refused, overdue. Nothing else	Links, selection, and the one accent

 Delivered  Awaiting signature  Expires in 6 days  128 days overdue  Draft  No bid  7

Soft fill by default. The solid pair is the exception — a count in the rail, a countdown in the bin.

Six levels, and no seventh

Before this, a card heading and the body under it were both 12px, separated by weight alone — which is why nothing on a screen told your eye where to look.

title · 24	Page title
numeric · 23	2 215 066
section · 16	A band, or a group of cards
lead · 14.5	A card heading
base · 13.5	Body, table cells, form values
micro · 11.5	Captions, column heads, meta

Money and quantities are always tabular. A column of amounts whose digits do not line up cannot be read down the column, which is the only reason it is a column.

tabular	not
1 861 400,00	1 861 400,00
353 666,00	353 666,00
96 000,00	96 000,00

Radii

7 · control	10 · card	20 · pill

Spacing

Four steps, and the page gutter is 28.

	6	inside a chip, between an icon and its label
	10	between fields in a row
	16	between cards
	28	the page gutter

Geist

Regular — body, table cells
Medium — a value that matters in a row
SemiBold — every heading, every total

Three weights. There is no bold, and no italic anywhere in the ERP.

Controls

One primary action per screen. And the rule this codebase already wrote for itself and then used in eight places out of forty: a control that refuses says why, on the screen. An absent button teaches nobody anything.

Primary • secondary • destructive • small • refused

A refusal is a sentence, not an absence

Delete forever

This invoice was issued and the client holds a copy. Cancel it with an avoir instead.

Greyed with `aria-disabled` , never `disabled` — so the reason can be read, and reached by keyboard. That decision is already in `button.tsx` ; what is missing is using it everywhere a control refuses.

Say the verb

A button is the only place the ERP tells you what will happen. “Do it” tells you nothing, and “Reply” on a system that cannot send is worse than nothing.

Do it	→	Complete pricing
Fix it	→	Confirm their NIF
Reply	→	Classify
Everything that happened	→	Activity
Prices gathered	→	Supplier prices
They went elsewhere	→	Mark lost

And take the architecture out of the interface

Thirteen strings in the English message file mention `.env` . One says “phase 5”. Two explain that a value is computed and not stored.

On screen today

“Overdue is computed from the due date, not stored.”

Instead

Overdue invoices

4 • 5 640 000 DA to collect

The explanation is right and belongs in `docs/` , where the person who needs it is reading.

Foundations • 3 of 6

Lists

Five files render this table today and fifty-six hand-write their own, which is where the inconsistency comes from. Everything below already exists in `components/data` — filters, saved views, pagination, the bulk bar. This sheet is what a list looks like once every list uses it.

Four screens, ninety-three times

Almost every screen in the ERP is one of these four. Getting them right is what makes the other eighty-nine consistent without drawing them. The header is the same component everywhere, and its actions slot is a required prop — passing nothing forces you to write the sentence saying why there is nothing to do here.

Work queue

What needs you, ordered by what it costs to ignore. One per person, not per module.

Getting around

Twenty-three rows with their own scrollbar. The sidebar's own comment conceded it back when there were twenty-four: “twenty-four destinations do not fit in the 768 pixels of a 12-inch laptop.” The fix applied was a scrollbar. Eleven fit, with Settings pinned below them — and the eleven that leave are not deleted. Every one becomes a tab of the thing it belongs to.

Reports

The grey word on a row is what folded into it — eleven destinations, plus Week, which was never in the rail at all. Every route still answers, so no link anybody saved is broken; they are reached from their parent instead.

The top bar

Search is already global and already good. What is missing is a way to start something from anywhere — today the only route to a new document is a link from one screen.

Saying what happened

The patterns that decide whether a person trusts the ERP. Every one of them is a sentence with a route out of it — never a blank screen, never a silent refusal, never a green tick over work that is still listed above it.

Banners

- Every backup is landing on the same disk as the database

The destination is set to a Linux path this machine does not have, so the script ignores it. That covers a mistake and nothing else — not a dead disk, not a theft, not a fire.

Change it

- Four things are still missing before you can invoice

Your NIF, your RC, the article d'imposition, and one bank account.

Finish setup

- This looks like a tender: the subject names a consultation, and an attachment is called a dossier.

Make it a tender

Before something cannot be undone

Name what goes with it. A confirmation that only says “are you sure” has told the person nothing they did not already know.

- ! Discard ENQ-2026-0005?

Its 6 lines and 1 draft quotation go with it. It stays in the bin for thirty days and comes back with one press.

Discard it

Cancel

The next action

One action, named. The rest of the checklist lives under it, and each line that is not passing carries the link that fixes it.

When a rule stops you

A gate blocks; it does not warn. A warning is a thing people learn to click past.

This offer needs the Gérant's approval

The margin is below the floor set in Settings.

Proposed	Floor	Your reason
11,4%	15,0%	Required

Request approval

The draft is kept, and you come back here when it is answered.

Even when you are both the Gérant and the Commercial, the gate costs one click and is worth it: six months later the audit log says why the margin was 11,4% on that job, and you are not reconstructing it from memory.

Why they are two tables and not one list with a filter

Today both kinds sit in one table under a single column called “counterparty”, and the only thing telling you which direction an order points is a badge. They are opposite obligations — one is money you are owed, the other money you owe — and the column that matters is different for each: a client order is judged by what has been delivered and invoiced, a purchase order by whether what arrived matches what was billed. The database already keeps them apart correctly; only the screen conflated them.

The unsigned note does not stop you. It is here because a client who disputes an invoice asks for the signed copy first.

A mise en demeure is a formal legal notice and the first step towards court. An automated system sending one to a client of fifteen years over a fortnight's delay would cost more than the invoice — so it always waits for a person.

Held once, not copied into every folder

A CASNOS attestation renewed in March must not leave eleven tenders still pointing at the February one — and it would, because nobody goes back through old folders. Each paper is held once against the company, and every folder points at it.

Papers with a duration and no date

Two are on file with a validity written in words and no expiry recorded, so they cannot be counted down. They are named here rather than left out of the list, which would read as “nothing expires”.
